Meeting of the Kentucky Agricultural Development
Board

Locals co-owner Birch Bragg enjoys a visit with Kentucky Rep. King and Rep. Roarx, both Tobacco Oversight Committee members.

This summer, Locals has been in the process of applying for, and receiving Kentucky Ag Development Funds to help facilitate a robust value-added processing program at our new location in Louisville, slated to open Summer 2024. This funding will enable us to buy larger amounts of local produce when it's in season and process these items into various value-added, shelf stable products to be stocked in our food hub. This allows us to have an even greater impact on our local food system, as we will be able to buy larger quantities from our farmers during the peak season when their products are abundant and need to be sold, and it will give us greater efficiency when making these products in-house, meaning we will be able to provide a Locals branded product at a lower price to the consumer in our grocery store. This will be a win-win for all of us!

The KADF application process has been an interesting journey from start to finish. Locals co-owner Birch Bragg has traveled to counties all over Central Kentucky, meeting with county Ag Councils to request their support and funding for our project. The Kentucky Ag Development Board agreed to match any county funds that we could generate, dollar for dollar. So far, we have secured $75,000 from 9 different counties, which is doubled through KADB matching, bringing our total to $150,000, nearing our $200,000 goal.

Birch and Sen. Webb talking during her tour at Locals on Thursday.

“While I have enjoyed touring the countryside, hills, and backroads of Kentucky throughout this process, I have really enjoyed getting to know the folks on these county councils, some of whom have been deeply involved in Kentucky agriculture for decades,” Birch explains. “The simple fact that this pool of money exists is a testament to the vision and understanding that our policy and lawmakers have always had about the value of our farms and farmers. Since the beginning of this century, the KADF has been carefully managed, protected and grown over the years to create an amazing resource for Kentucky farmers, large and small.”

We want to thank our Kentucky legislators, House Representatives Kim King and Rachel Roarx, and Senator Robin L. Webb, all members of the Tobacco Settlement Agreement Fund Oversight Committee, for stopping by to tour Locals yesterday and learn first hand how the KADF is making a difference in Kentucky agriculture! We are deeply grateful to all of those involved in this process at both the state and county level. We look forward to using these funds to have an even greater impact on Kentucky producers and to continue making local food more accessible to everyone in our community!
