Fiscal Impact of Jails on the Counties

Reagan Taylor, Madison County Judge Executive, addressed the fiscal impact of jails on the county. In 2015, he put together a jail task force with 14 individuals from the community which realized there was a drug problem. They proposed building a rehabilitation center and raising taxes which was opposed by the community. Madison County currently has a 180-bed facility, which cannot accommodate the 474 individuals being held by Madison County courts including 62 state inmates. Last year the county spent nearly 1 million dollars housing inmates with other counties. The budget estimate for this year is $800,000 for inmate housing with an additional $3.6 million from the county budget for jail expenses. Judge Taylor asked for direction from the legislators on what to do and how to address the situation.

Joe Pat Covington, Scott County Judge Executive, addressed the fiscal impact of jails in Scott County. They have an 86-bed facility for inmates built in 1992. They have 121 inmates in the facility, with an additional 10-15 inmates being held in other counties through contract. He agreed that this is a drug problem. Judge Covington asked for direction from the legislative body. Building a new jail would be a significant expense for their community.

In response to a question from Representative Petrie, Judge Taylor said he would rather not have a jail in their county, because the county cannot afford it. Judge Covington said there needs to be a joint approach to address the issues on a state and local level. Judge Taylor said it would be good for Kentucky if all county jails had uniform programming.

Responding to additional questions from Representative Petrie, Judge Covington said the goal would be developing programs to reduce recidivism by having every county offer the same drug and rehabilitation programs. Judge Taylor said there will always be state inmates, but the time they are incarcerated in county jails depends on when they are classified and relocated by the Department of Corrections. Judge Covington said the county's revenue went from $270,000 in 2021-2022 to $460,000 in the current fiscal year.

Adam O'Nan, Union County Judge Executive, addressed the fiscal impact of jails on the county. Union County has a 47-bed facility built in 1974. The maintenance cost is incredibly high plus a new HVAC and roof are needed. Union County is experiencing a jail crisis driven by the drug crisis. He said they have three paths the county could take: continue as things are, build a new jail, or close the jail. After reaching out to many, the county will be closing their jail. He has extended bids to have other counties house their inmates and currently Webster County has been housing Union County inmates. Transporting prisoners to Webster County is a considerable cost savings compared to what they were spending on housing inmates locally. If the state does take over the jails, he asked members to ensure that counties do not find themselves in a worse financial situation than they are currently experiencing. He expressed concern that the state is not being proactive at creating programs to keep inmates from coming back to the jails.

Rick Stiltner, Menifee County Judge, addressed the impact of jails on his county. Menifee has a $4 million dollar budget, and 42 percent of the county is owned by the federal government, limiting the county's ability to generate revenue. Menifee County does not have a jail, and has no intention of establishing one. They have been transporting all their inmates to either Rowan or Montgomery County, with whom the county contracts to house inmates. However, going forward, due to rising costs, Menifee County will begin transporting inmates to Lee County. Judge Stiltner emphasized that delays in the court system are contributing to the rising jail cost.

In response to questions from Co-Chair Bray, Judge O'Nan said there is a revolving door for many offenders and it does not take long for the same 'frequent flyers' to come back through the system. Judge Stiltner said there are cases where individuals, before they even get officially charged for one drug charge, are released, and picked up again on another drug charge before the first charge has been processed. Judge O'Nan added there is about a 35 minute drive between the counties for transporting inmates. Judge Stiltner said it is about an hour drive to transport Menifee County inmates to Lee County, inmates held on misdemeanor offenses will be transported to Powell County.

Responding to additional questions from Co-Chair Bray, Judge O'Nan said the state per diem for housing goes straight to Webster County in hopes of keeping costs stable.

Judge Stiltner stated that the costs for housing is a significant component of seeking additional revenue.

Mark McKenzie, Johnson County Judge Executive, addressed the fiscal impact of jails on his county. Inmates are housed in a 150-bed regional jail utilized by 4 counties. Built in the late 1980s, each county pays their own rate for inmates. Johnson County contributes about 35 percent of the inmates. Primary jail costs consume about 80 percent of property tax collections. There is a decision-making board governing the regional jail including hiring and setting rates. Johnson County is the host county so other counties do have to budget transportation costs. Programs offered to inmates include GED classes and substance abuse programs.

Harry Clark, Rowan County Judge Executive, addressed the fiscal impact of jails on the county. In 2016, following a decision that the old facility was incapable of meeting county needs, the county bonded for $15 million to build a 279-bed facility. In 2017, there was an additional bond issue of $4.8 million bringing the total cost to $19.8 million. A tax increase was levied to help make bond payments for the jail, with the remainder going to emergency services and roads. There are 335 inmates housed at the facility, 126 of whom are state inmates. Rowan County have an $18 million budget and the jail accounts for approximately $6 million. Rowan County also offers GED and counseling programs to inmates, as well as an inmate work program.

In response to a question from Co-Chair Bray, Judge McKenzie said the regional jail system operates as a pretty good model. If you have a jail administrator who does not perform, then the board can fix that. The only negative is that other counties are still responsible for transportation costs, which can be a burden. Additional money received from state inmates housed at the facility is a significant support and allows the jail to function as well as it does. The jail is also a job creator.
