

A JOINT RESOLUTION relating to Kentucky's 225th anniversary celebration.

WHEREAS, it is argued that the area that was to be called Kentucky became known to European explorers as early as 1541, with an expedition lead by Hernando De Soto traveling from present-day Tampa, Florida, through Henderson, Kentucky, before turning back after reaching the Ohio River; and

WHEREAS, during the 17th century, other French and Dutch explorers and traders periodically ventured into and through Kentucky, later to be followed by hunters from the British colony known as Virginia; and

WHEREAS, in 1774, James Harrod and thirty-seven others began an expedition that resulted in the first permanent settlement of European settlers at what was known as Harrod's Town in present-day Mercer County; and

WHEREAS, soon thereafter, Daniel Boone led a party of immigrants through the Cumberland Gap to establish a settlement at Boonesborough, and by doing so also created what is known as Boone's Trace, the first road into Kentucky; and

WHEREAS, during the period of the American Revolution, thousands of settlers came into the area seeking to establish farms, homes, and communities; and

WHEREAS, the first shot of the American Revolution was fired on April 19, 1775 and, upon hearing of the colonists' battle, settlers camped on the middle fork of Elkhorn Creek named their campsite Lexington in honor of their victory, and it was this campsite that grew into present-day Lexington, Kentucky; and

WHEREAS, exactly seven years to the day later, on April 19, 1782, one of the last battles of the American Revolution was fought at what has come to be known as the Battle of Blue Licks near present-day Mount Olivet, Kentucky, soon leading to an end of the bloody struggle to secure American independence; and

WHEREAS, in an effort to obtain greater economic freedom, self-determination, and security, in 1784, the first of nine constitutional conventions was called with conferees meeting in Danville; and

WHEREAS, in 1788, Virginia issued enabling acts to allow Kentucky to petition for statehood; and

WHEREAS, in April, 1792, another convention was held in Danville that resulted in a ratified draft of Kentucky's first constitution, which was submitted to the United States Congress, and on June 1, 1792, Kentucky was admitted to the Union as the nation's fifteenth state; and

WHEREAS, from its beginnings, the promise of fertile soil, abundant natural resources, a temperate climate, and unlimited opportunity drew people seeking a better life;

NOW, THEREFORE,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:
